The $20k Start Up - How to Start Your Own Vending Machine Business Lindsay Roland

The vending machine business is a $20 billion industry that has people wanting to get involved because it makes it possible to own a business without needing to hire a bunch of employees and you can easily run it yourself. One of the biggest perks to owning your own vending machine business is the freedom it can provide for you. You can decide how many machines you want to invest in, decide on the cost of the items you sell, and you have complete control over the amount of profit you can make. You can even run the company on your own and go re-stock the machines about once a week without having to hire a single employee. You can also start small and buy only a few machines until you begin to make a profit. Once you've reached a certain level of success, you can purchase more vending machines and obtain even more profit.

Having a vending machine business is also a way for you to work for yourself. Many people grow tired and unsatisfied in the corporate world and seek more freedom to enjoy a fuller life without being tied down to a certain job and a specific number of hours to work each and every week for someone else. You can make your own schedule and decide how many days and how many hours each week you will spend on checking up on your vending machines.
