Excerpt from The Master of the Strong Hearts a Story of Custer's Last Rally

Not since Nolan gave the word that made the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava a glorious and deathless blunder has so notable an unnecessary slaughter of gallant men found place on the records of heroism as that of Custer's last rally in the valley of the Little Big Horn.

Ambuscades have been a feature of every American war from the days of Braddock on the Monongahela to the entrapment of the Rough Riders at La Quasina; but Custer's defeat was more than an ambush; it was the culmination of Indian strategy and generalship designed by one who was himself no war-chief, and who proved himself neither hero nor warrior, - Sitting Bull, the medicine-chief of the Uncapapa Sioux, the crafty Master of the Strong Hearts.

It is to tell, in story-fashion; but as correctly as the sifted reports and records of both sides render possible, the real tale of Custer's last rally and heroic death, that this book has been written.
